Linking Idaho's agricultural industry

Southern Idaho is home to Union Pacific's main artery to the Pacific Northwest. Heavy amounts of transcontinental traffic travel the track that follows the Snake River. In addition, Southern Idaho is laced with a network of railroad feeder lines serving Idaho's richly varied agricultural industry. Potatoes, sugar beets, beans, grain, fertilizer, phosphate and forest products are moved by rail.

Union Pacific also serves extreme northern Idaho with its line connecting Spokane, Washington, to the Canadian rail system in Eastport. Another Union Pacific route runs between Pocatello and Silver Bow, Montana, where connections are made with other carriers.

Pocatello and Nampa are important terminals for Union Pacific in Idaho. Both cities are hubs of branch line activities and serve as crew change points.

Union Pacific's Idaho heritage

The first rails in Idaho were built by John Young, son of Mormon president of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints Brigham Young. Originally intended to serve Mormon farmers in Northern Utah's Cache Valley, the Utah Northern Railroad reached Franklin, Idaho, from Ogden, Utah, in 1874.

Investor Jay Gould felt the line's future was reaching the mines in Montana. He took it over and reorganized it as the Utah & Northern Railway in 1878. Union Pacific acquired ownership and extended the line north to Montana, reaching Silver Bow in 1881.

UP subsidiary Oregon Short Line entered Idaho in 1882. Seven years later, the OSL was consolidated with the Utah & Northern and the Utah Central. The Idaho lines were then operated as part of the Union Pacific system, but retained a separate legal identity as Oregon Short Line until they were merged into UP in 1987.

Supporting the communities we serve

In 2009, Union Pacific provided nearly $300,000 to charitable organizations in Idaho communities. This amount includes funding from Union Pacific Foundation for The Principals' Partnership Program and the Community Grants Program.

The Foundation's primary giving program, The Principals' Partnership, provides 46 public high school principals in Idaho with year-round, self-directed assistance from some of the nation's top education professionals. As part of this program, UP also sponsors a Summer Leadership Institute where principals come together to share insights and concerns and hear from nationally recognized speakers. Visit www.up.com/found for more information.
